WPL rides a wave of new sponsors

The TATA Women's Premier League (WPL) has seen a surge in commercial backing as it prepares for the 2026 season, reflecting its growing appeal following India's 2025 ODI World Cup win. JioStar has signed 15 sponsors for the upcoming season, up from 10 in 2025, with brands across sectors including SBI, OpenAI (ChatGPT), OnePlus, Policybazaar, Kalyan Jewellers, TVS Eurogrip and Reckitt Benckiser India joining the roster. This expanded sponsor mix highlights confidence in women's cricket as a mainstream marketing property and an attractive platform for brand engagement.

AD RATES SOAR BY OVER 40% FOR WPL, AS BRANDS SEEK PURPOSE-LED PARTNERSHIPS

RAISING THE STAKES

- 15 brands are on board as broadcast sponsors this season, including SBI, Kingfisher water, Kalyan Jewellers and TVS Eurogrip
- Multi-season ad partnerships are up by 33% this season
- Ad rates have increased by 40-50% this year
- Viewership for the WPL is expected to grow by 40-50% over last season, on the back of India's win at the ICC women's World Cup

AS DEFENDING CHAMPION Mumbai Indians gets ready to face Royal Challengers Bengaluru in the opening fixture of this year's Women's Premier League (WPL) on Friday, advertisers off the pitch are also gearing up for what promises to be a breakout season. Media agency sources report that broadcast ad revenues have already doubled for the 2026 season over last year, with ad rates surging by over 40% to cross ₹60,000 per 10 seconds for SD and HD TV.

Connected TV (CTV) slots are also being sold at a premium of around ₹400-500 CPM (cost per mille) while mobile CPM is at ₹150-170. Industry sources add that advertisers are betting big after the Indian women's team vowed fans with their historic ICC World Cup win last year. The tournament saw the cumulative viewership reach 446 million for the India-South Africa final at DY Patil Stadium, matching the ICC Men's T20 World Cup 2024 final viewership.

Broadcaster JioStar has roped in 15 sponsors this season, including SBI, Kingfisher, packaged water, Kalyan Jewellers, TVS Eurogrip, VIDA and BHM UPL.

Chintan Shah, senior vice-president at Sportz Interactive, says the WPL has become the gold standard for purpose-led, high ROI brand associations in the country. "The league has transformed from a promising start-up in 2023 to a commercial powerhouse today. One of the big developments this year is the entry of ChatGPT as a premier partner for the league, the first time that it has partnered with any sports event or property in the world. Brands are also cashing in on the 150% surge in TV ratings and the explosion of CTV in India," says Shah.

Observers expect viewership to skyrocket this season by at least 40%. As per industry reports, the 2025 season delivered a total TV reach of 233 million, matching the viewership for the men's Asia Cup last year.

Experts also laud the fact that advertiser interest hasn't been impacted by the fact that the ICC men's T20 World Cup will take place right after the WPL, in February. Karan Yadav, chief commercial officer, JSW Sports, points out that brand enquiries this season are nearly twice the number logged last year, with a substantial number of 2025 advertising partners choosing to return this year.

The numbers are compelling enough also for advertisers who do not have large media budgets to blow up. A viewership north of 200-250 million at a fraction of the average IPL media investment is a good deal for brands, say analysts.

Slow but steady

"We are seeing a meaningful expansion in the advertiser mix for the fourth WPL season," says Anup Govindan, head of sports sales at JioStar, adding that women's cricket has reached an inflection point over the past couple of years. "What was once seen as an emerging sport has now been firmly established as a valuable sporting property," he notes.

Advertiser engagement has moved from tactical buys to strategic associations, marked by earlier decisions, larger commitments and long-term, multi-event partnerships, he adds.

While traditional categories like FMCG, beverages and consumer tech continue to lead, Govindan adds that brands from sectors like BFSI, fintech, auto, EV, jewellery and AI are also on board this season.

"What has also shifted is the nature of engagement," says JSW's Yadav. Deal values have largely stabilised, and premium partnerships are seeing a 15 to 20% increase with brands opting for deeper associations. "We're also seeing a clear rise in long-term commitment, with multi-season partnerships up by around 33%, indicating that brands are looking beyond short-term impact. Entry-level partnerships are being designed more thoughtfully, often anchored in digital-first activations or content-led storytelling rather than pure visibility," he adds.

The audiences that will be of particular interest for brands are the first-time viewers or those that are not traditional hardcore cricket fans, remarks Prashant Joglekar, founder of SportsBiznet. "The newer audiences are also more likely to be more receptive towards advertising during the league, if these viewers increase incrementally by even 10-20%, advertisers will have struck gold," he states.

Although the viewership numbers are solid, Joglekar argues that the WPL's stakeholders could do more to boost fan engagement and build sustained interest in the women's game. Most of the interest in women's cricket and the WPL comes from the improved quality of cricket on display and the fact that India is a cricket-loving country, he says. The league needs to do more at the community and grassroots level to ensure the momentum sustains over the long term.

Winners Take It All

As brands queue up to partner with WPL franchises, India's victorious campaign brings not just visibility for women's cricket, but also commercial viability

By KATHAKALI CHANDRA

Success her international debut in 2021, Renuka Singh Thakur has emerged as India's pace-bowling spearhead, delivering swing spells that choke the flow of runs. Yet, for much of that time, her on-field impact rarely translated into recognition of a "valler, most of us wouldn't get recognised aside from perhaps Smriti (Mandhana) and Harman ad Jyotiham Harmanpreet

Kaur! Singh Thakur says ahead of the start of the fourth season of the Women's Premier League (WPL). But that has changed since India's victorious campaign at the ICC Women's T20 World Cup "Now, wherever we go, people ask for selfies and autographs. It's a nice feeling," smiles the 30-year-old, who conceded just 28 runs in her eight overs in the final of the World Cup. Singh Thakur's story resonates with a generation of cricketers that has long hovered on the fringes of the conversation. Three weeks after the team's triumph, Deepthi Sharma, the Player of the Tournament, was snapped up by UP Warriors (UPW) for a record ₹2.2 crore at the WPL auction, a 23 percent hike from her previous pay cheque of ₹2.6 crore. Even youngsters like N Shree Charant, 21, who finished her first World Cup with 14 wickets from nine matches, pocketed a whopping ₹1.1 crore from Delhi Capitals (DC), more than double the ₹55 lakh they had paid for her in WPL 2023. This is where the victory has been seismic for women's cricket—in shifting the paradigm for a sport that has always been considered an add-on to the men's game. Its knock-on effect was felt in the immediate aftermath, when the BCCI (Board of Control for Cricket in India) onboarded three new commercial partners for WPL—ChatterPT, Bideri, and Kingfisher—at a combined value of ₹44 crore. And as the league commenced its fourth season from January 9, it continues to benefit from the upswing.

Consider that, for the first time in its four-year history, Sharma's franchise UPW, fielding a new-look side led by seven-time World Cup winner Australian Meg Lanning, managed to close all its jersey sponsorship deals a full month before the tournament began. "Even in the IPL (Indian Premier League), the men's T20 franchise league, you will see teams closing last-minute deals. But we wrapped them up a month ago," says Kishanlal Wainankar, CEO of Capri Sports, which owns UPW. "And the value of each deal has gone up by at least 10 percent."

VISIBLE AND VIABLE
The numbers may appear counterintuitive to a recent report by D&P Advisory, which pegs the

WPL in Numbers

₹1,275 cr League's latest valuation*	₹4,670 cr Value of franchise sales commercial officer of JSW Sports, the sports marketing and management vertical of the JSW Group.

In just four years, the WPL has transitioned from being a cause that needs support to a product that has the potential to fetch a stupendous return on investment. The shift is evident in the number of brands that have queued up to join its ecosystem—from 50 in its first season in 2023 to 70-plus this year, says Aravind Chakraborty, SVP, strategy, Mudraam, a media buying agency. Sources in the industry estimate that broadcaster JioTV, too, has doubled its ad sales revenue compared to last year, with a 10 to 15 percent markup in pricing in each category.

The focus, confirms Bharat Sharma, co-founder of sports marketing agency ITW Universe, has conclusively moved from the empowerment narrative to one of celebrating the cricketers. "There has been a 10 to 15 percent increase in the asking price for foreign associations, like the front of jersey branding—the most prominent ad space on a team's shirt—for top teams. Companies like U'roid Professional Parts (a title sponsor for UPW, have been onboarded at a 20 to 25 percent premium over last season's rates," adds Sharma.

THE EVERLASTING GAME
The victory of the World Cup offers a glimpse into why brands are betting big on the eyeballs that the WPL can bring. About 146 million tuned in to watch the multi-million tournament on streaming platform JioTV, surpassing the combined audience of the previous three editions. But the biggest validation of the women's game came from the 185 million who watched the India versus South Africa final, equalling the number for the men's T20 World Cup final in 2024 and finally shutting down a question that many cricketers have had to field early in their careers: "Do women even play cricket?"

Advertiser interest in the WPL confirms that the World Cup is not being seen as a one-off. Broadcaster JioTV has racked up 15 advertisers before the start of the tournament, compared to 10 last season. Anup Govindhan, head of sports sales, says the date underscores how far women's cricket has come in a short time. "The depth and diversity of advertisers reflect the growing confidence in the league's ability to deliver reach, scale and impact," he adds. "What is particularly exciting is that brand participation is not limited to a few expected categories. Alongside FMCG and beverages, we are seeing traction from categories like BFSI (Tata Capital), fitness and payments (Blinkit), auto (TVS Emap), electric vehicles (Valeo) and artificial intelligence (OpenAI)." Even for teams, while women-centric categories like beauty and cosmetics have marked their presence—all five franchises have tie-ups with them—brand portfolios have expanded beyond them. For instance, 2024 champion Royal Challengers Bangalore (RCB) has a tie-up with Green Solar, a green energy brand, while commercial tyre company JK Tyre has joined the roster for two-time champion Mumbai Indians (MI), led by World Cup-winning captain Harmanpreet Kaur.

"What's encouraging is that brands are no longer looking at women's cricket as an experiment or a short-term objective. They're approaching it with longer-term intent, clearer objectives and deeper integrations," says Sunil Gupta, CEO of DC. This has led to longer partnerships and more integrated storytelling across the year, not just during the tournament window of 21 days or through platform logo placements. Yadav of JSW Sports estimates a 23 percent rise in multi-season partnerships, at least 50 percent of UPW's dozen tie-ups this year are multi-year deals, while six of MI's sponsorship portfolio of nine are returning partners looking to build on the fan engagement of the league's most successful franchise.

Aditya Gupta of DC: "We have close to a dozen tie-ups that are content- and campaign-driven. While not every deal is about a sharp jump in headline value, there's a clear trend towards structured, multi-years, multi-asset partnerships." The rise of content-driven partnerships is propelled by the soaring social media prowess of the teams. Despite a middling performance over the last three seasons, Gujarat Giants (GG) saw a 4x spike in its following over the last eight months, led by Instagram, where numbers have risen to 309,000 from 16,000 last December. The three-week period after the World Cup and prior to the auction saw some of their most intense engagement, says Sanjeev Adasra, chief business officer of Adani Sportsline, which owns GG. Brands are keen to lean into this momentum.

"Brands are now considering tie-ups in the way they run their during the IPL. They are looking to maximise value from partnerships—how much time they get with players, how performance is measured and what the commercial approach looks like. They have taken a professional approach towards the WPL, which shows they are serious about the league," says Wainankar of Capri Sports.

1983 AND THEN SOME
Beyond legacy brands with long-standing associations with sport, the WPL has also emerged as a gateway for younger, first-time advertisers to tap into its growing audience. "The tournament is increasingly being used as a lower-risk entry point into cricket, offering national visibility and cultural relevance at significantly lower investment thresholds than men's properties,"

One such example is Ekta Banars— a high-end Banarsi saree venture founded by Palak Shah, a fourth-generation textile business sion—which marked its maiden foray into sports sponsorship by designing the jersey for UPW. How does a handcrafted ethnicwear brand find salience among a cricket audience? The fit is more organic than it first appears. Both brands are rooted in Uttar Pradesh, and both are led by women—Shah for Ekta and Jinita Sharma, director at Capri Sports, which owns UPW. But beyond geography and leadership, says Shah, the partnership is driven by shared ethos rather than sales logic. "We did it for the love of women's cricketers trying to break stereotypes, just like we are doing in the male-dominated world of handlooms. And I would be lying if I said the World Cup had nothing to do with it," says Shah. "I am not looking for this association to move the marketing needle. It's a no-agenda sponsorship. We did this just for what women's cricket has come to represent."

In effect, says Adasra of Adani Sportsline, the World Cup victory has done more for women's cricket than the 1983 triumph did for the men's game. "Consumption of women's cricket had already begun with three seasons of the WPL, so when the World Cup win came, the impact multiplied manifold," he says. "Safe to say that by the end of WPL Season 4, the consumption and engagement of women's cricket will have more than
